- Overly strict parents who attempt to control their children can cause problems
- This includes leaving their offspring struggling to form emotional relationships
- Teenagers of overbearing parents also have lower education levels as adults

Teenagers with overly strict parents when they are young struggle to form emotional relationships when they get older, researchers claim.

Researchers from the University of Virginia found that children with overbearing and controlling parents at 13 also have trouble with educational attainment by age 32.

This goes against the traditional maxim of 'spare the rod, spoil the child', with researchers saying strict parents risk harming their child's long-term prospects.

Lead author Dr Emily Loeb says parents, educators and doctors should be aware of how parents' attempts to control teens may be stunting their progress.

'This style of parenting likely creates more than a temporary setback for adolescent development because it interferes with the key task of developing autonomy at a critical period,' said Loeb.

For this new study the team set out to determine the long-term impact on youth of parenting that is psychologically controlling.

Previous research has identified psychological control as a 'problematic' parenting behaviour but this study shows there is a lasting impact.

Loeb said that parents attempt to control their children in this way through 'intrusive' and 'harshly manipulative' means.

This includes withdrawing love and affection when the parent is angry at the child, or making the child feel guilty for upsetting the parent.

She said children whose parents use such tactics tend to have problems such as lower grades and lower self-esteem, likely because the children are discouraged from asserting themselves and gaining independence.

Researchers studied the progress of 184 people from the age of 13 to 32.

The participants, from urban and suburban areas in the south eastern United States, came from a variety of socio-economic backgrounds.

Half were female, and 42 per cent identified themselves as members of minority ethnic groups, according to researchers.

The study also considered income, gender, and average school marks at age 13.

Researchers asked the participants to fill out annual questionnaires about themselves, their parents, and, in adulthood, their relationship status and education.

They also collected information from each child's peers about how well liked they were in school, and they also watched videos of each youth interacting with his or her closest friend and later in adulthood, interacting with his or her romantic partner.

The findings, published in the journal Child Development, showed that having overbearing and over-controlling parents at age 13 was associated with less supportive romantic relationships for those who were in relationships by age 27.

Lead author Dr Emily Loeb says parents, educators and doctors should be aware of how parents' attempts to control teens may be stunting their progress. Stock image

The researchers also found the offspring of overbearing parents were less likely to be in a relationship by the age of 32.

Those people also had lower educational attainment by the same age, they found.

The most important age, in terms of when these problems begin, are at 15 or 16, according to the researchers.

Teens with overbearing and controlling parents at that pivotal age were less psychologically mature and were less liked by their peers.

Study co-author psychology Professor Joseph Allen said parents might mean well but it could be making things worse for their children.

'Even though parents routinely attempt to guide their children toward successful adaptation, over-controlling parenting in adolescence has the potential to impede development in a fundamental way that's not easy to repair,' he said.

The findings have been published in the journal Child Development.

HELICOPTER PARENTING: A FORM OF OVERPROTECTIVE PARENTING

Parents who are overprotective are sometimes referred to as 'helicopter parents'.

They earned this stereotype for being perceived as relentlessly hovering over their children, trying to micro-manage their affairs.

The first use of the term is widely attributed to Dr Haim Ginott's 1969 book Parents & Teenagers.

In it, teens said their parents would hover over them like a helicopter.

The term became popular enough to become a dictionary entry in 2011.

Helicopter parents pay extremely close attention to their children to try to protect them from failure, rejection and injury.

They want 'happy' children and often believe that teachers should pay attention to their children in the same overprotective way.

This approach has sparked controversy, with some experts arguing that in order for children to become well adjusted, they need to experience a full range of emotions.

Parents who want their children to always be happy are doing their children a disservice, in this view.

The 'helicopter' parent rushes in to help rather than allowing their child to have a go at managing a challenging situation themselves.

Some experts say that this can lead to children who are unable to cope with even minor issues, as they are never given the opportunity to fail and then learn from their mistakes.

However, some experts suggest that such 'pushy' parenting may provide children with benefits in later life.

Among them is Dr Matthias Doepke, a professor of economics in the Weinberg College of Arts and Sciences at Northwestern University.

He argues that the intensity of parenting has gone up in many countries in line with rising inequality.

Pushy 'helicopter' parents, normally from more economically advantaged backgrounds, generally raising higher achieving offspring.

GADGET REVIEWS

▶ iPad Pro review: Apple takes the tablet to new heights (at a price)

Apple's new iPad is blazingly fast, gorgeous to look at, and quite simply the best tablet out there - and for a lot of people, probably the best computer out there.

▶ The small smart display with big potential: Google Home Hub review

Google is late to the game with its Home Hub, but the low price and AI features make it a great choice for controlling your home, showing pictures and even helping run your life.

▶ 'Good enough for most people': iPhone XR review

On one hand, the XR lacks the high-resolution screen and dual-lens camera on the XS. but it is $250 cheaper and still get most of the other cutting-edge features found on the more expensive model.

▶ The Pixel 3 outsmarts the iPhone (IF you trust Google with all your information)

AI seems to permeate every part of its software, from the ability to answer calls for you to being able to almost perfectly predict your morning commute.

▶ Bigger and better in every way: Apple's XS really does take the iPhone to the Max

Apple's new iPhone XS and XS Max go on sale on Friday - and the biggest handset Apple has ever made is also its best (and possibly unsurprisingly, its most expensive).

▶ The $250 beauty device that works like 'Photoshop for your face'

Israeli beauty-tech firm Pollogen has launched its Geneo Personal device, which stimulates oxygen from beneath the skin's surface to give you a clearer, fresher face within minutes.

iOS 12 review: The update that really will improve your iPhone

Rather than cram in a plethora of new features,

▶ Apple's latest update is about boosting stability, with improvements in everything from FaceID and battery life.

▶ Naim Atom: The hifi that will change the way you listen to music

It's eye-wateringly expensive at $2,999, but Naim's Uniti Atom is a revelation, an integrated amplifier that makes it easy to stream music at a quality you've probably never heard before.

▶ The $1,000 wireless speaker that really IS worth the price: Naim Mu-so Qb review

Naim's incredible Mu-So Qb takes you back to the good old days - where the music captivates and enralls, rather than simply being something in the background.

▶ The hi-tech $2,000 spin bike that really could change your life

Peloton's hi-tech bike lets you stream live and on demand rides to your home - and it's one of the best examples of fitness technology out there - at a price.

▶ The best all in one wireless speaker you'll ever hear: Naim Mu-so review

It might not be a name familiar to the US market, but Naim is a legendary British brand hoping to make a splash with the American launch of its $1499 Mu:So speaker.
